Why do people still use Craigslist to find roommates? Why has no other service for matching roommates failed to seriously catch fire in SF?

Max Pelzner, Entrepreneur ~ Creative Director
72 Views

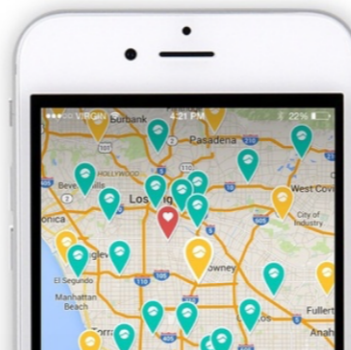

Great question Annie.

I think people still use Craigslist because it has become a great place to find what you need. Now, that doesn't always mean it's a good source for finding roommates. There definitely is a lack of social identity and transparency that comes with using a service like Craigslist for housing/roommates.

Given the unsustainable housing prices and millennials spend on rent (accounts for up to 45% of monthly income), there is a growing trend for shared rentals. I think other services haven't caught fire yet because they:

- 1) focus on the rental/listing
- 2) haven't adapted to the millennial generation (mobile)
- 3) try and play "matchmaker" without giving people the opportunity to discover and connect with people on their own.

From the conversation we had the other day, we think our service Yoroomie is the answer to this problem.

What are the best services for finding roommates?

Max Pelzner, Entrepreneur ~ Creative Director

There are many services out there that "help" you find roommates, but there is no transparency when you want to connect with someone and start communication.

We are reinventing the roommate search process and Yoroomie App is the easiest way to find the right roomie. Our focus is on connecting people with the right roomie and not on physical property listings.

Max, you crossed 1,000 views on your answers today! Great work!
