Beyer Speed Figures

By Andrew Beyer

Racing fans are likely to feel wistful when they examine the past performances of modern-day champions and compare them with the great stars of the past. Yes, there was a time when America produced horses such as Secretariat, Affirmed, Seattle Slew and Spectacular Bid in the same decade. But many years passed since the winner of the Horse of the Year title could be realistically compared to the sport's immortals.

In 2022, when there was no doubt about the identity of the Horse of the Year, lovers of the sport did debate how the year's champion measured up with the greats of the past. It was reasonable to try to fill in the blank to complete this sentence:

Flightline was the best American racehorse since ____.

Flightline's only flaw, if it can be considered such, was the brevity of his career. A freak injury in his stall prevented him from running as a 2-year-old, and two other physical setbacks disrupted his campaigns at 3 and 4. He made only six starts – four in Grade 1 stakes company – but few high-class horses have ever been so dominant. Flightline won them all, by an average margin of 12 lengths. The best horses in the United States couldn't get close to him.

It is not easy to compare horses from different generations, but speed figures provide an objective assessment of horses' talent regardless of when and where they ran. My colleagues and I have been calculating figures since the late 1980s, and Beyer Speed Figures have been published in Daily Racing Form since 1992. We are confident in judgments based on figures from 1989 to the present, and these numbers help certify Flightline's place in history.

In the Pacific Classic at Del Mar, Flightline faced one accomplished challenger, Country Grammer, and blew him off the track, running a mile and a quarter in 1:59.28 and winning by 19 and a quarter lengths to earn a Beyer Speed Figure of 126. He won under wraps and might have run even faster if jockey Flavien Prat had pushed him in the late stages of the race. Even so, this was the second-best figure of the new millennium, exceeded only by Ghostzapper's 128. (That performance, in 2004, deserves an asterisk. It came in a four-horse field on a sloppy track at Monmouth Park.) Since the Beyer Speed Figures have been published, only three horses besides Flightline have recorded a 126.

Flightline's subsequent performance, his career finale in the Breeders' Cup Classic, earned a figure of 121, but his effort was arguably more impressive than the Pacific Classic. Flightline was facing Life Is Good, a winner of four Grade 1 stakes and a brilliant speedster capable of sprinting a half-mile in :44 flat. Life Is Good went to the lead, but Flightline quickly challenged him, dueled hard and, after six furlongs, overpowered his formidable rival and ran away from the rest of a high-quality field. Old-timers searching for a comparison might have likened the effort to Seattle Slew's legendary Jockey Club Gold Cup performance in 1978.

So, Flightline was the best horse since...whom? One could argue that he was the best since Sunday Silence, who earned a figure of 124 winning the Breeders' Cup Classic in 1989. But Sunday Silence, who faced some formidable competition in his career, had some blemishes on his record – five second-place finishes in his 14-race career.

So the safe answer to the fill-in-the-blank question is that Flightline is the best American racehorse since Ghostzapper. In his four starts as a 4-year old and his finale at 5, Ghostzapper recorded figures of 120, 128, 114, 124 and 122. The 124 came in the Breeders' Cup. Ghostzapper didn't have a perfect record as Flightline did, but his only two losses came in sprints early in his career.

Flightline in 2022 was the indisputable star of a racing year that was largely devoid of other star power. The Triple Crown series was disappointing, with none of the classics producing a speed figure higher than Early Voting's 105. The 2-year-old crop was hardly star-studded, with championships going to Breeders' Cup winners Forte (100) and Wonder Wheel, who won the Juvenile Fillies with a shockingly low 83.

Some of the best performers of the year were the other older males who raced in Flightline's wake. Olympiad scored six victories in graded stakes and earned figures as high as 111. Life Is Good recorded wins in stakes with figures of 112, 110 and 107. In an ordinary year, either of them might have been an Eclipse Award winner. The fact that Flightline trounced them both is further evidence of his historic talent.
