

BrainPOP at Home

Read on at home! Discover, play, and learn with your family.

Keep your children's literacy skills sharp and ready! There's nothing better — or more important — than getting lost in a good book. And while they're learning at home, there's no better time to introduce books and literature that excites their minds and imagination. Here are our ideas on how to get started.

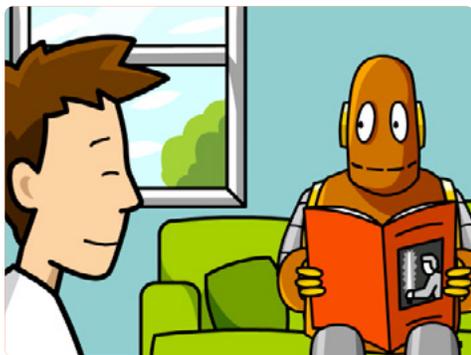

WATCH & LEARN

Choosing a “just right” book that you can't put down can be tricky. To help your child find great books to read, explore BrainPOP's Famous Authors & Books and/or BrainPOP Jr.'s Authors unit. The short animated movies give a peek inside the life of the author and the literature.

Does your child have a favorite book? Look to see if the author is in our collection. For example, if Charlie and the Chocolate Factory tops your child's list, then check out the Roald Dahl movie. If your little one loves Green Eggs and Ham, click to watch the Dr. Seuss movie.

READ! READ! READ!

After learning about an author (or book), take a trip to the library to explore books by the author. If your library is sponsoring a reading contest, encourage your child to enter. Then get reading! Extra time at home offers the perfect opportunity, whether sitting in the shade outside or hanging out at home on the couch!

READING ALOUD DOESN'T HAVE AN AGE LIMIT

Reading aloud is a great way to spend quality time with your child. No matter your child's age, he or she is never too old to be read to. Reading aloud is a chance for you to model fluent reading and expand your child's vocabulary by pausing to discuss challenging words. In fact, studies find that reading aloud is one of the greatest predictors of reading success—even with older kids! Besides all that—listening to a story read aloud is just plain fun!

PRODUCE A BOOK TRAILER

Everyone has their favorite genre. What's yours? Watch BrainPOP's Literary Genres movie as a family. Then have each person read a book of a different genre. After reading, family members each use Make-a-Movie to produce a book trailer... like a movie trailer! Begin with a letter that asks about the book. Then build the trailer scene by scene, adding backgrounds, images, animations, text, transitions, and record narration and other sounds to bring the trailer to life. Will your trailer convince everyone in the family to read the book?

BOOK GROUP

Create a book group with friends that includes parents (or caregivers) and kids. At the start, get together to brainstorm a few books to read over the next couple months. Set a realistic goal, such as one or two books a week. For younger children, you might want to do this as a read aloud with a different adult reading the book to the group each week. For snacks, serve something associated with the book in some way. For example, if you read James and the Giant Peach, serve peach pie! Or, green eggs and ham for Dr. Seuss's famous story.

PLAY BRAINPOP'S GAMEUP!

Put your book smarts to the test by playing one of BrainPOP's literary games. Not all topics have games but many do! Here's a few examples:

Lord of the Flies

Challenge your memory in this game based on William Golding's novel.

Time Zone X: Agatha Christie

Explore the life and times of this popular mystery writer.

The Meaning of Beep: Emily Dickinson

Use context clues and what you know about this poet.

Sortify: World-Changing Women

Sort current and historical women according to self-selected categories.

Younger kids put their reading smarts to the test with these playful BrainPOP Jr. games developed by The Electric Company:

Jessica's Joyride

Collect rhyming words to fuel a space jet!

Minecart Mash

Transform words into new ones.

Jungle Jumble

Put broken words back together.

Scrapyard Slice

Slice compound words into their word parts.

EXTRA! EXTRA! READ ALL ABOUT IT! (AND WRITE ABOUT IT!)

Books are just one way to get in extra reading. Don't forget about newspapers and magazines. Keeping up with current events is important and allows your child to practice important reading skills and discover new vocabulary. To get started, check out BrainPOP's Reading a Newspaper movie. Try to read one to two news stories each day with with your child and discuss what they're about.

Feeling inspired? Encourage your child and his/her friends produce a neighborhood newspaper featuring reviews of local events, interviews with community members, crossword puzzles, news stories, ice cream shop reviews, and more. For help with interviewing, have them watch BrainPOP's Conduct an Interview movie.

WORLD TRAVELER

Going away? Whether you are traveling somewhere exotic or simply going to the local beach, have your child become an expert on your destination. Borrow books from the library about your vacation spot and pick up brochures from a local travel agency. Invite your child to "read up" on what there is to see and do where you are going. When you arrive, your child can be the tour guide.

Not going away? No problem! Your child can become an expert on a place they hope to visit one day!

GAME ON!

Designate a family game night each week. If you've got a reluctant reader, games are a great, seamless way to get your child to read. From game cards to instructions, reading is key to playing. Wordplay games like Boggle and Scrabble are good choices for literally getting kids to play with their words!

CALLING ALL FOODIES!

From recipes to menus, reading is central to the culinary world. Designate one night per week when your child is responsible for deciding the menu for a meal. You can help with the shopping and cooking, but finding and reading the recipe is up to your your child.

LITERACY VOLUNTEER

Communities across the country have opportunities for volunteer readers. This usually involves reading to children in waiting rooms, hospitals, homeless shelters, and more. Being a reading volunteer is a double bonus—your child practices his/her own reading while bringing the magic of books to someone else.

ACT UP!

Have your child get together with some neighborhood kids to produce and perform a play this summer. They can re-enact a favorite book, make up an original story, or anything else they can dream up. From researching ideas and writing the script to reading lines and putting on the show, plays are chock full of literacy skills that help prevent summer slide. For inspiration, have them watch BrainPOP's Drama movie.

BrainPOP Jr. topics offer a feature called Word Play in which kids choose a word to draw, write, and create a skit about!
