OSCR360 Use Cases:

During closing arguments by the prosecution in the Craig Rideout murder trial, OSCR360 was used to deliver a visual walk through of the people's case. This visual walk-through tied critical pieces of evidence back to each of the four defendants, enabling the jury to view the crime in its entirety, not in bits and pieces. It was powerful; every juror experienced the same view of the facts.

OSCR360 was used in the prosecution of Jonathan Ortiz for Murder in the Second Degree:

"The jury was able to see the witness's vantage point of the events that occurred. The witness was able to articulate where all of the parties involved in the crime were located through the use of the 360." Julie M. Hahn
